

Estate Tax Update

Owning a U.S. Vacation Property (Revised Edition, January 31, 2011)

If you are a Canadian resident who owns U.S. real estate, learn about your potential estate tax liability and how to reduce it.

January 31, 2011

The estate of a Canadian resident may be required to pay U.S. estate tax on a U.S. vacation home owned by the deceased. However, the Canada-U.S. Tax Treaty (the Treaty) provides some relief.¹ As a result, Canadian residents will have a U.S. estate tax liability only if their worldwide assets are valued at more than U.S. $5 million.

While U.S. estate tax applies to other U.S. assets, such as U.S. securities, this Estate Tax Update discusses the estate tax only as it applies to U.S. real estate. All amounts are in U.S. dollars.

How is U.S. Estate Tax Calculated?

If you own a U.S. property, you will be required to pay U.S. estate tax based on the fair market value of the property at the date of your death. For 2011, estate tax rates start at 18% and reach 35% for properties worth more than $500,000.

You can reduce your estate tax liability by claiming a tax credit (referred to as the unified credit) equal to the greater of:

- $13,000; and
- $1,730,800² x the value of your U.S. assets ÷ your worldwide assets

Therefore, if your U.S. home accounts for 15% of the value of your worldwide estate, you will be entitled to a unified credit of $259,620 ($1,730,800 x 15%).

An additional credit is available if the U.S. property passes to a Canadian spouse.

Future estate tax rates and credit amounts

Unless new legislation is enacted, in 2013 the United States is scheduled to return to its former higher rates and lower exemptions.

While nothing is certain, it seems prudent to plan on the assumption that the U.S. estate tax will be around in some form beyond 2013.

	Calendar year
	2011-2012	2013 and after
Unified credit amount	$1,730,800	$345,800
Highest estate tax rate	35%	55%

1. This Estate Tax Update addresses the tax issues for Canadian residents who are not U.S. persons for U.S. income and estate tax purposes. For U.S. income tax purposes, a U.S. person is an individual who is a U.S. citizen or U.S. resident alien. For U.S. estate, gift and generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax purposes, a U.S. person is a U.S. citizen or an individual who is domiciled in the United States.

2. The U.S. estate tax on $5 million of assets.

Example: The $1,000,000+ property

Consider Steve and Becky, married and residents of Canada (neither are U.S. citizens). Steve owns a Florida home worth $1.2 million. His worldwide estate is worth $8 million. Steve's estate tax liability is $141,180, as shown in the table below.

If the property passes to Becky, the Treaty provides further tax relief, through the marital credit. As the table shows, the marital credit is sufficient to eliminate Steve's U.S. estate tax.

		Year of death 2011
U.S. estate tax before unified credit		$400,800
Without marital credit	Unified credit	$259,620
	Final U.S. estate tax	$141,180
With marital credit	Marital credit	$141,180
	Final U.S. estate tax	Nil

Canadian tax implications

U.S. estate tax is often greater than Canadian tax. On death, a taxpayer will pay Canadian income tax on the accrued capital gain on the U.S. home and will also be subject to U.S. estate tax on the value of the home. Canada will provide a foreign tax credit for U.S. estate tax paid on the U.S. home.

Because Canadian capital gains rates are significantly lower than the top U.S. estate tax rate and Canadian tax applies only to the gain in the property rather than its fair market value, the estate likely will pay tax at the U.S. estate tax rate. In addition, the provinces generally do not allow a foreign tax credit for U.S. estate tax paid. As a result, the deceased may be subject to some double taxation at the provincial level.

Ownership Options to Reduce Exposure

Personal ownership

Personal ownership may be appropriate if the estate tax liability can be managed or eliminated through the credits available under the Treaty. In the case of a married couple, to maximize the unified credit available under the Treaty, the best approach may be to put ownership in the hands of the spouse with the lower net worth. However, the implications of the Canadian income tax attribution rules should be considered.

If the home is owned personally, the individual's will should be reviewed. For example, if Steve's Florida home passes to Becky under his will, Becky may be exposed to U.S. estate tax on her death. A properly structured spousal trust created under Steve's will could eliminate Becky's estate tax exposure.

Even if the estate tax exposure cannot be fully eliminated, it might be possible to obtain additional life insurance to cover the estimated estate tax. This could be the simplest solution, particularly if the individual is young and has access to low-cost insurance.

Personal ownership in joint tenancy

Many Canadian couples hold property in joint tenancy. However, joint tenancies between spouses who are not U.S. citizens can cause U.S. gift and estate tax problems.

U.S. gift tax may be imposed on the creation or termination of a joint tenancy in U.S. real property. For U.S. estate tax purposes, if the surviving spouse is not a U.S. citizen, 100% of the value of the property is included in the estate of the first spouse to die, unless the executor can prove that the surviving spouse contributed funds towards the purchase of the property. For Canadian tax purposes, no deemed disposition will occur until the death of the second spouse.³ This can result in foreign tax credit problems.

These U.S. gift and estate complications mean that joint ownership generally is not a recommended form of ownership. As well, joint tenancy may not allow the spouse to undertake effective will and estate planning for U.S. estate tax.

An alternative to joint tenancy may be to hold the property as tenants in common. This could allow each spouse to undertake will planning to protect his or her 50% interest.

3. The Canadian tax regime allows for a tax-free spousal rollover for assets bequeathed to the surviving spouse or a spousal trust.

Canadian discretionary trust

If the estate tax exposure cannot be dealt with through personal ownership and will planning, the individual may want to consider establishing a Canadian discretionary family trust to own the property. Two key advantages are that:

- estate tax may be avoided on the death of both the individual and the individual's spouse; and,
- if the property is sold, any increase in value will be subject to the same capital gains rates as if the property were owned personally.

This structure generally appeals to Canadians when the property value is over $1 million and does not constitute a significant portion of the individual's net worth. This is because the individual must be willing to give up control over the trust property to his or her spouse and children. In addition, due to Canadian income tax rules, the trust likely will have to be terminated before its 21st anniversary date.

Therefore, the trust structure may not appeal to younger families.

Non-recourse mortgage

A non-recourse mortgage may be an alternative, particularly if the property is already owned by a Canadian resident (who is not a U.S. citizen). A non-recourse mortgage is collectible only against the specific property and not against any other assets of the individual. For U.S. estate tax purposes, the value of the property is reduced by the value of the non-recourse mortgage. For example, if Steve obtained a non-recourse mortgage of $700,000, his taxable estate would be reduced to $500,000. As a result, his U.S. estate tax exposure would be reduced to $48,000 in 2011.

In our experience, most commercial banks would be unwilling to lend more than 50% to 60% of the value of the U.S. real estate. Therefore, it is unlikely that you can eliminate the total value of the property by obtaining a non-recourse mortgage through an arm's-length lender.

If the non-recourse mortgage is obtained from a non-arm's length party, such as a relative, the arrangement should include commercial interest and repayment terms. The financing cost will have to be considered when comparing this alternative to other ownership arrangements. It may be possible to reduce the financing cost if the mortgage can be structured to obtain an interest deduction in Canada. This means that the mortgage proceeds cannot be used to purchase the U.S. vacation home, but must instead be used to purchase other income-producing investments.

Other options

Other available options include:

- ownership through a Canadian corporation; or
- donation of the property to a U.S. registered charity.

Using a Canadian corporation is no longer popular because the shareholder must now report a taxable benefit for the personal use of the property, and the income tax rate on the sale of the property is significantly higher than if the individual or a trust owned the property.

We encourage you to consider your options before entering into a purchase agreement. Many planning techniques cannot be used after the property is purchased, because of U.S. gift tax consequences associated with the transfer of U.S. real estate.

Estate Tax Update

Highlights estate tax changes, most of which apply only until December 31, 2012.

January 31, 2011

Temporary U.S. Estate Tax Relief Leaves Future Uncertain

On December 17, 2010, President Obama passed legislation that reinstates estate and generation-skipping taxes for 2010 through 2012. These changes affect:

- U.S. citizens and individuals domiciled in the United States; and
- Canadian citizens and residents who are subject to U.S. estate tax on account of owning U.S. assets (such as U.S. real estate or stock in U.S. corporations) because the relief provided under Article XXIX-B of the Canada-United States Tax Treaty is tied to the U.S. estate tax exemption.

Reinstatement of estate tax

The new legislation retroactively reinstates estate tax with a top tax rate of 35% and a $5 million exemption (indexed for inflation after 2011). For the estates of individuals who died in 2010, the estate's executor may elect to treat the estate as if the new legislation had not been enacted, in which case, the estate would not be subject to estate tax and the modified carryover basis rules would apply. If no election is made, the estate will be subject to the new estate tax regime, which generally provides for a stepped-up basis in property passing from the decedent. The new legislation also allows the executor of a deceased spouse's estate to transfer any unused portion of the exemption to the surviving U.S. citizen or U.S. resident spouse.

Changes to gift tax

For gifts made in 2010, the gift tax exemption is $1 million and the tax rate is 35%. Starting in 2011, the legislation increases the gift tax exemption to $5 million. Any use of the $5 million exemption towards a gift will reduce the exemption available for estate tax.

Reinstatement of generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax

The new legislation also reinstates GST tax through 2012 for transfers made after December 31, 2009. A top tax rate of 35% and a $5 million exemption (indexed for inflation after 2011) are provided. Although the GST tax applies retroactively in 2010, the tax rate for any generation-skipping transfer made during the 2010 calendar year will be zero. The GST tax rate will increase to 35% in 2011 and 2012.

Caution required

The attached Estate Tax Update assumes that the 2010 estate tax regime changes are in effect. However, the U.S. has not passed legislation that extends the 2010 federal estate tax rate and exemption level beyond December 31, 2012. Unless legislation is passed before the end of 2012, 2013 will see reinstatement of:

- an exemption of only $1,000,000 (indexed for inflation); and
- a maximum tax rate of 55% (60% on the portion of the estate between $10,000,000 and $17,184,000).
