Ján Uriga - new senior manager at Transformation Advisory in PwC

Ján Uriga was appointed a new senior manager at Transformation Advisory practice of PwC Slovakia from September 2012.

Ján has 10 years of experience in human resources management, and consulting roles with a focus on cultural changes, leadership and strategic transformation. He has helped companies to define and implement their vision and strategy as well as set whole organization to pursue its goals. For the last 3 years has been working in management consulting for various companies as a specialist for Big Four.

Ján graduated from University of Trnava, and then gained PhD. at Institute of Experimental Psychology, SAV. In addition, he passed specific training programs in change management, systemic management, project management in USA, Germany, Italy, Switzerland etc. Ján is an external lecturer at MBA courses at Vienna Technical University and a guarantee of subjects related to organizational psychology.

"Companies today seek a way how to sustain and even grow. To make it happen, there is necessity to set strong vision, compose feasible strategy but above the need for motivated and engaged staff wins. The journey toward desired state takes time and effort. And here I see my role: to support leaders in driving change processes where culture and management systems play its important role. People are not very happy with changes especially when they are not co-creators and then resist. In such situations I usually use Lao-t's words: To resist change is like holding your breath – if you persist, you will die..." says Ján about his joining PwC.
