PwC donates 120 computer monitors to the Department of Education

HAMILTON, Bermuda – PwC has donated 120 computer monitors to the Department of Education to be used by students in Bermuda’s public schools. This donation is to help to facilitate Government’s wider objectives around ensuring that all schools have functioning computer labs so students have access to the latest technology.

Arthur Wightman, PwC Bermuda leader, said: “Technology in education is fundamental, not least because it is future oriented, it makes learning interesting, it supports collaboration and it serves to develop a wide variety of skills. Long term, we share Government’s vision that Bermuda can diversify its economy through technology but in order to do so Bermudians need to be put in a position to take fulfilling and rewarding roles in this growing industry. Our people wanted to make this donation to contribute to this wider objective.”

Minister of Education and Workforce Development, the Hon. Diallo Rabain, JP, MP said: “On behalf of the Department of Education and our students, I am pleased to accept this generous donation from PwC. The monitors will be installed in computer labs in all our public schools. Government stands on the principle that Bermuda works best when we work together, and this is a fine example of how businesses and corporate partners can support our students by sharing resources to assist with their education.”
