Digitising Compliance to reduce cost and risk, while boosting resilience and trust

Reporting and Compliance across all areas of a business is becoming more complex. Global changes in tax laws and regulations and related reporting requirements are increasing as well as the costs to comply.

Despite high costs and efforts, organisations are regularly experiencing compliance failures, either:

- major incidents where tax compliance failures could significantly impact an organisation's reputation or,
- increased tax compliance demands causing tax functions to deliver more with less.

Often, these issues arise as a result of navigating complexity and risk with limited resources. Compliance is often treated as an obligatory cost of doing business, instead of an opportunity to derive data insights to bring greater value to the broader organisation.

A change to how organisations manage tax compliance can both increase its effectiveness and reduce cost. A technology-enabled and data driven approach can help make compliance processes more efficient and provide the insights companies need.
