PwC donates J$350,000 to Jamaica Environment Trust

Kingston, Jamaica – PwC has donated J$350,000 to the Jamaica Environment Trust (JET). The donation comes a day after the firm announced its commitment to offset air travel emissions and energy consumption by 100% and will support JET's work in environmental education and advocacy.

Gail Moore, Environment Lead Partner, PwC Jamaica, said: "We all have a responsibility to protect our environment and this will require a paradigm shift in the decisions that we make each and every day. If we don't act boldly, severe changes in climate, water and air pollution, extinction of species and erosion of our shorelines will be inescapable consequences of our actions or inactions. We all stand to benefit from a healthy environment and through our donation to the Jamaica Environment Trust, we hope that it will further accelerate their efforts to effect change in our attitude towards caring for our environment."

Alok Jain, Regional Advisory Leader, PwC said: "The Caribbean is among the most vulnerable regions to the adverse impacts of climate change. For us, climate adaptation and resilience is a matter of survival. We at PwC are committed to doing our part to drive environmental awareness and promote climate resilient development. Our support to JET is a tangible demonstration of our commitment to protecting Jamaica's natural environment and, by extension, our local economy."

Speaking on the firm's donation, Suzanne Stanley, CEO of the environmental organisation, said, "We are extremely grateful to PwC for this generous contribution to JET. Donations like this are so very important to sustaining and building the capacity of our organisation, and supporting the work we do to protect Jamaica's natural resources. We look forward to building on our relationship with PwC in the future."

Gail Moore, Environment Lead partner and Alok Jain, Regional Advisory Leader, PwC Jamaica present a cheque for $350,000 to Suzanne Stanley, CEO of the Jamaica Environment Trust.
