In the 1990s, people could only watch movies by going to the movie theater or rent one from the video store and hope it was in stock. If you wanted to make your own movie, you had to go to film (another name for movie) school and receive financial backing from a major film studio. All of this sounds unfamiliar and inconvenient.

Today, you can do any of the things mentioned above with your phone because of the World Wide Web.

Learn more about web development by watching this video and then expand your knowledge by completing the worksheet below by yourself or with an adult!

Try It Yourself!

Think about what you use the web for and how often on a daily basis, whether in your school or personal life.

What is the definition of the World Wide Web?

How many websites were there in 2010?

Each website or page has a unique address, what is it called?

What is a website you feel the world is lacking?

Name one programming language that is used to create websites?